What Is Fire-Retardant Treated Wood (FRTW)?

Fire-Retardant-Treated Wood (FRTW) is lumber that has been impregnated with specialized, fire-retardant chemicals under high pressure. These chemicals insulate the underlying wood and reduce the amount of heat/flammable volatiles released during a fire. In turn, this helps prevent the spread of internal fires.

Uses For Fire-Retardant Treated Wood

Wondering what FRTW can be used for in your next project, or why you should use it? Here are a few reasons.

- Superior protection against house fires
- Better performance and resilience in dry, fire-prone areas
- Can reduce insurance costs for a new building
- Can be substituted for non-treated wood in almost every building application
- Offers superior resistance to the elements, termites, & more
- Easy to size, cut, and install
